PRICE, TWO CENTS

A GENEROUS TRENTONIAN.—Many of our citizens remember Mr. Harford Perdicaris, son of our well known fellow townsman, G. A. Perdicaris, Esq. A recent number of an Italian newspaper contains a little story very much to his credit. It appears that a slave at Morôcco, a young man of about 18 years, appealed to Mr. Perdicaris to intercede for his liberation from bondage. The young man's case was a very distressing and pitiful one and made a strong impression upon Mr. Perdicaris' sympathies. He accordingly offered to purchase him of his master, if the American Consul would authorize him to do so. The Consul was applied to without avail, and application was made to the British Consul with equal non success. Finally the American Consul communicated with his government at Washington, and the requisite authority was at once granted, and Mr. Perdicaris purchased the slave and gave him his freedom.
